The Kightlinger Homicide.

ACQUITTAL OF GEORGE TURNER AND FRANCIS BROWN.

The trial of George Turner and Francis Brown, indicted for the wilful murder of Rowland Kightlinger at Hydetown, on the evening of the third of December last, was commenced at the Court of Oyer and Terminer at Meadville on Wednesday, and concluded on Friday evening. The incidents of this homicide, occurring so near this city, and involving parties well known in this section, are familiar in the recollection of our readers, as they have been presented to all their phases in these columns from time to time. The attendance of the Court House, during the progress of the trial, was very large. We present in another column an abstract of the material testimony, on both sides, accompanied with the theory of the prosecution and defense. The jury, it will be seen, returned a verdict of acquittal of both Turner and Brown, after a brief consultation, a result clearly justified by the evidence, and required by the law.

Great credit is due to the indefatigable and learned counsel for the defense, Messrs. Barry and Johns, of this city, for the preparation of the case for the defense, and the skillful conduct of the trial.

GERMAN DRAMATIC PERFORMANCE.

Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Oston will produce at Corinthian Hall, on Monday evening next, the great German drama of "The Uncle," in the German language. Mr. Oston and lady are veterans on the stage, in their own country as well as this. Mr. O. was educated to his profession in King William's private theatre in Berlin, and was for two years connected with a German theatre in Cleveland. Himself and wife have taken up their residence in Titusville, and their German friends have persuaded them to give a dramatic entertainment at Corinthian Hall. They will draw a good house, and American citizens will feel a curiosity to see and hear them.

THE PUBLIC LEDGER ALMANAC for 1871, for which we are indebted to Mr. George W. Childs, is a most useful publication, embodying many facts valuable for reference in a neat and compact form. It is Mr. Childs' annual New Year's gift to the subscribers to the Public Ledger of Philadelphia, and the circulation of that journal is so large that an edition of eighty thousand copies has been demanded. The local intelligence of the Almanac makes it a desirable acquisition for every citizen of Philadelphia, but eighty thousand copies more might readily be sold elsewhere.

TEMPERANCE MEETING.

The new Temperance Society, which was organized at Bonn Hall on Sunday last, will hold its second regular meeting at the same place to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock. The officers are as follows:

Secretary—J. K. Turner.

All are cordially invited to attend. The Society starts out under promising auspices, and bids fair to effect an important work.

GEORGE VANDENHOFF.

The famous elector, is to give select readings in the Opera House, on Monday evening next. We have not space for a more extended notice in this issue, and Mr. Vandenhoff is too well known to require it. All who are not so fortunate as to hold season tickets to the regular course of the Y. M. C. A., should improve the earliest opportunity to secure reserved seats. For sale at Howe's and Hurd's.

PASSING A BROKEN BANK BILL.—On

Monday yesterday arrested a man by the name of Smith, for passing an Oil City broken bank ten dollar bill, at the colored citizen's ball on Thursday night.

Murder Trial.

CORONER'S INVESTIGATION.

COMMONWEALTH VS. GEORGE TURNER,

FOR THE MURDER OF A DOWNHILL KIGHTLINGER IN HYDETOWN ON THE NIGHT OF THE 30TH OF DECEMBER, 1870.

We gave in yesterday's HERALD the proceedings in the Court of Oyer and Terminer, at Meadville, the above case down to the empaneling of the jury.

After the report of District Attorney Smith.

The following is an abstract of the testimony out of this was in the Powers' Road;

two persons came down in the team from Stinson's Hotel; don't know who they were.

William Turner, Sen., sworn—I am unable to defendant; I was at Titusville and Hydetown on the third day of December;

I purchased the gun in the morning of the first at Ridgeway's tavern and took it down to Bucklin's hotel; he was standing in the road drawing his clothes out of the mud; I got in and drove up to the bridge at Hydetown. After

I got out some thirty rods I loaded the gun; my nephew, William Turner, and myself were riding alone; we came on about half way from Titusville to Hyde-which had not yet showed that he did not consider Mr. Seward's judgment of political matters always very reliable. He came back from Washington in the fall of 1863, and I saw him directly after, and asked him about what was going on there, and he said, "Well, Mr. Seward, I have called upon Mr. Seward. This was in October, 1864, just at the time when the series of Union victories was commanding which terminated with the surrender of Lee and the capitulation of Richmond. At that time Mr. Seward, and Mr. Sherman, and Mr. Andrew, we have been contending for three principles: First, to put down the rebellion by force; secondly, the abolition of slavery; and thirdly, to restore the Union. Now," said Mr. Seward, "I think you will see that we have not been able to put down the rebels by force. We shall not be able to abolish slavery. But by means of some compromise with the southern leaders, we may be able to restore the Union. Well, Sir, what you did you made to him?" Said he, "There was nothing to be said to a man, that was in this state of mind, and I took my hat and came away."

The same year John Andrew was elected Governor of Massachusetts, and the largest popular vote ever cast for any man in our history. We remember his forcible, prophetic of the coming hurricane; how he got the militia of that State into working order, and what ridiculous there was cast upon him. He was a man of great energy, and blankets which afterward protected our Sixth regiment from the storm, on their way to Washington; and how at the State Ho Ho he lit out his side and secretaries working all night when they got home. And when the British came to England, he sought armed steamer, for the coast, he made repeated visits to Washington to strengthen Mr. Lincoln and others there in their determination to uphold the Union; in the early days of the movement of volunteers, and stated his own opinion upon that measure, so unpopular at the time and so fully accepted afterwards. He attended the convention of all the governors of the Atlantic states, and uprooted the Anti-Slavery party, and took no interest in the institutions of the South than any other governor ever did. Constitutionally he was the means of preventing our statements at Washington from making mistakes and errors. He founded the Boston Free Press, and edited it with the boy at Westborough and the girl at Lancaster, and gave such sweet counsel to the young ladies at the normal schools as they will remember all their lives, and I think he was a man of great energy, and merely because of his trained habits of mind, and his natural capacity, but also as I have said, because his was single, because he never had to stop to think how this or that question was to affect his own personal interests. And the first time he spoke of abolition or vanity of self-chosen life, blazed his clear vision. He did not have any enemies, or if he did he did not keep them long. A sweet smile of human kindness, and a kind of natural humor, was ever on his face, and he was a good humorist. He could not be partial or unfair, even if he tried to be so, in such equilibrium was he maintained by the steady gravitation of his soul towards truth and justice. Mr. Clarke told a number of interesting reminiscences of Mr. Andrew, when he appeared at the executive office on the 19th of April, 1861, when he sent the famous "no bullion" telegram, and when he solicited the dead and wounded Massachusetts soldiers to tenderly care for; how chearful, and social no was said all his ministrations; what a strangely mixed company was present in his office on the day when he left the Executive office; how at the White House in 1861, when he was reluctantly restrained from entering, he reluctantly restrained himself from peeping into the children's room in the evening, while waiting for Mr. Lincoln to come in; how willing his friends and acquaintances were to go to him to get information, and at last, "Call and leave your Market Baskets Goods Promptly D-harvest First of Charge."
